

WATCH: 'Cyrus Trump and Korea! – prophetic update from Lance Wallnau

Originally published in Prophetic TV

In a video message released in Jerusalem, speaker, author and thought-leader Lance Wallnau, who prophesied in 2015 that God was raising Donald Trump like he did King Cyrus in Isaiah 45, offers some insights into the significance of the US president's historic meeting with North Korea's Kim Jong Un on Tuesday.

Watch the video message below and see notes and a transcript of part of the message.

Note the numbers 111 and 12 and 70 as they each have significance.

First off I believe the RONALD [Reagan] and the DONALD both have the same high-level angel assigned to them to put America on track and the global order in temporary alignment. Both Presidents shifted the nation and the world in ways that advanced the kingdom by opening up territory to the church.

Here's a Ronald and Donald similarity: the Singapore Summit took place on the 12th of June, the SAME day and month Ronald Reagan, on June 12th 1987. President Reagan broke down the wall between east and west Germany and Donald Trump is breaking down the wall between North and South Korea.

Those TWO 12's speak of GOVERNMENT in heavens advancing!

In the Hebrew calander June 12 corresponds to the 29th day of Sivan, when Moses sent 12 spies to explore the land of Israel's inheritance. Psalm 2:8 is the promise of Nations being given to Jesus. That is happening now as Cyrus Trump fulfills Isa 45:1 to “subdue nations” and “loose the belts of Kong’s” or break the military threats aligned against him.

This month Sivan, is the Biblical month of alignment, direction and territorial/business expansion for the kingdom.

MASSIVE PRAYER and BREAKING OF CURSES!

Key Singapore leaders told me they had to really fight thru resistance by repenting for many prayer curses on Kim that authorized dark forces to create confusion. Once they broke thru they pleaded for Kim to be realigned with his great, great grandparents – who were Christians!

Many thousands joined in prayer right up to and thru the meeting. Anyone who has gone to Korea can attest to the unusual intensity of South Koreans on this subject. They pray with tangible tears and travail for the North, acting almost like siblings that are separated and longing to come together.

NORTH KOREA’S CAPITAL Pyongyang was the center for Asian REVIVAL in 1907! That was 111 years ago.

In fact it was called the JERUSALEM of the East! Hard to imagine Azusa Street being shut down by the Gestapo, but that’s what happened, with multitudes being sent to prison and death.

Now a window is opening. If things keep going right a MASSIVE revival will be spearheaded by BUSINESS willing to go in and share the gospel while building up the nation.

South Korea was founded shortly after Israel- Aug 15, 1948. That’s 70 years! Both Israel and South Korea were birthed at the same time! Jesus said, “behold the fig tree (Israel) and ALL THE TREES (New Gentile Nation-States), when they begin to bud the time is near.”

70... 111... 12 .. somehow it all adds up!

'We don't appreciate your stance on Israel' – Linda Gobodo

Vuka Africa founder and leader Apostle Linda Gobodo tells the SA government it is out of step with the nation's Christians and should not make the mistake of downgrading the SA embassy in Israel.

When the children of Israel sinned against God, He judged them and allowed them to be taken captive by the Chaldeans for 70 years so as to give the land rest from their sins and from their abominations (2 Chronicles 36:15-21).

When they were in Babylon, He instructed His prophet, Jeremiah, to write a letter to them telling them that they will be there for 70 years. But He made a promise to them, for thus says the Lord: After seventy years are completed at Babylon, I will visit you and perform My good word toward you, and cause you to return to this place. For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, says the Lord, thoughts of peace and not of evil, to give you a future and a hope (Jeremiah 29:10-11).

Seventy, is an important number. It is the number of deliverance – its meaning in Hebrew. The Lord delivers His people from bondage and oppression and He restores all they have lost. He restores their fortunes and He performs His good word toward them.

Seventy years ago, the Lord of grace and mercy restored the state of Israel to fulfil His promise to their forefathers, Isaac and Jacob. The amazing thing for me is that when the state of Israel gained their independence on May 14 1948 an amazing thing happened on the southern tip of Africa. Exactly 12 days later, on May 26 1948, the nationalist party instituted Apartheid.

When Israel was delivered, South Africa went into bondage. I do not believe this is just a coincidence at all. When Israel was celebrating 70 years of independence, President Donald Trump recognised Jerusalem as the eternal capital of Israel according to the scriptures and moved the American Embassy to Jerusalem the city of the Great King (Psalm 48:2).

In the month of May in 1948, the new government of South Africa recalled their ambassadors to Israel to make a statement that they are against Israel and are supporting Palestine. The statement is saying in essence Israel is not allowed to defend her borders and to protect her people from the brutality of Hamas and jihad.

There have been threats of downgrading the South African Embassy to Israel for some time now. At its conference in December the ANC passed a resolution to downgrade the embassy, and this week the matter will be debated in parliament.

It is high time that the ANC and the government of South Africa know that there are Christians in the country who do not support or appreciate the attitude they have against Israel.

This nation has 80% Christians and as bible-believing Christians, we stand on the Word of God regarding Israel. On top of that South Africa must not think Israel will not respond or retaliate if they go ahead with the downgrading and closing of the embassy in Israel.

If this whole situation ends up with Israel closing down their embassy in South Africa, guess who will suffer the most? It is Christians in South Africa who make the pilgrimage to Israel, they will be the ones that will suffer greatly. There are tours out of South Africa to Israel almost every month. And I must add those Christians will not take this lightly.

Therefore, I would like to send a message to our government not to make this move because the consequences will be much greater than they imagined and to their detriment.

Remember, as the Church, we understand the significance of 70 years. We have received true liberty and deliverance from apartheid and we are not coming out empty-handed. We have evidence in the Bible that whenever God delivers His people from oppression, they never come out empty-handed and South Africa will not be an exception. The Lord will perform His good word toward South Africa and He will restore.

In 2019, we will have a righteous government of God by a righteous president (see the prophetic words about South Africa). Righteousness exalts a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people –Proverbs 14:14.

Celebrating the dads in our lives – Vivienne Solomons

A monthly column by Vivienne Solomons who is a legal consultant who passionately believes that God wants His people to make a difference right where they are and to stand up for what is true and just. She is also passionate about encouraging young women to walk victoriously with God and she is engaged in a challenging faith journey as a parent of a child with special needs.

Pappa, Pa, Father, Daddy, Dad ... He may be known by different names, each one heavy with emotion, memories, meaning and expectation ... both good and, dare I say it, sometimes not so good. I am aware, as you must be too, that much has been said in the media about there being a difference between being a 'dad' and being a 'father' and the fact that some fathers behave in such a way as to 'not deserve' the title 'Dad'. Although there may be some value in the distinction, that is not the focus of what I write here today and as a result, I use the two words interchangeably.

Recently, we adopted a baby (who has very quickly grown into a talkative toddler) and as I have observed and experienced his being knitted into our family, I was reminded of something I had read a while ago:

Dads are most ordinary men turned by love into heroes, adventurers, story tellers, and singers of songs.

I noticed it when our first son was born as well. Something was stirred in my husband when he became a father for the first time, and now again. This does not mean he is perfect or without flaw. He is, after all, just an ordinary man. But it does allude to the fact that becoming a father (either biologically or through adoption) or assuming the role of 'Dad' in someone's life (perhaps through marriage or another relationship) necessarily results in a change in the heart of a man. Whether and to what extent he rises to the challenge (and fatherhood can of course be challenging, just as motherhood can be) makes all the difference in the life of his child.

Various scientific studies have demonstrated the important role a dad plays in the well-being and success of a child, which I briefly mention below:

- Children with fathers are less likely to live in poverty.
- Children with fathers do better in school.
- Children without fathers are more likely to serve time in prison.
- Children with fathers are less likely to abuse drugs and alcohol.
- Children without fathers are more likely to be sexually active as teenagers.
- Children without fathers are more likely to be obese.
- Children with fathers get more roughhousing (and roughhousing makes kids more resilient, smart, moral and socially adept).
- Children with fathers are more likely to have a larger vocabulary.
- Children with fathers are more likely to be encouraged to take healthy risks.
- Children with fathers gain many additional benefits to health and happiness (including less anxiety and fewer physical and mental symptoms under stress in young adulthood).

If you wish to read further in this regard, I refer you to <https://www.artofmanliness.com/articles/the-importance-of-fathers-according-to-science/>.

Traditionally, much emphasis has been placed on the role a mother plays in the life of her child but clearly, there can be no denying the very powerful and critical influence that a dad has, not only on the development of his child but also on his child's ability to navigate through life.

Unfortunately, whether by choice or by circumstance many children grow up without knowing their father and in these instances, the scientific findings highlighted above can be discouraging. To those of us who are so called single moms I would say, and indeed to us all, that we should not underestimate the importance of male mentors (for example, grandfathers, uncles, and brothers) in the lives of our children. For in the words of an African proverb, it takes a village (read: community) to raise a child.

This Father's Day let us pray for and celebrate the dads amongst us, not only our own fathers and those who lovingly help us raise our own children but also those who live and work alongside us. Let us be an encouragement and support to all the dads we know.

Happy Father's Day!

Shawn Bolz: North Korea is part of God's end-time plan

US President Donald Trump walks with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un at the Capella Hotel on Sentosa island in Singapore. (PHOTO: Reuters)

Originally published in Charisma News

Author, minister and leading prophetic voice, Shawn Bolz discloses how God supernaturally positioned him to advise South Korean presidents and leaders – and shares prophetic insight into His redemptive plans for Korea.

The meetings between Donald Trump and Kim Jong Un are historic and have taken dozens of years and millions of prayers to get this far. I have met with two South Korean presidents and dozens of political leaders both in America and in South Korea and given spiritual perspective to them. I even prophesied to one of them about Kim's father and confirmed he was battling a disease he was dying of when only intelligence agencies knew of it. This put me on their map, and we had hours of dialogues about what God wanted to do with Korea. Not just North Korea, but South Korea. I, as well as several of my teams and associated ministries, have been to North Korea to do assessments. I have seen Korea first hand and believe I have seen something in the Spirit as well that just might help your perspective and prayers.

When God created this amazing race of people, it wasn't divided as it is now. In just one generation, we have seen South Korea become a superpower and world contributor to computer science, agricultural science, medical science and so many more fields. In the spiritual realm, South Korea has sent more missionaries than any other country except America, and they will risk it all to go to the most unusual places.

I remember asking one of the professors of science and engineering at Seoul University what would have happened if South Korea had never been developed and was still a developing nation. He looked at my smartphone in my hand and said, "I predict that smartphones would be behind by five generations, water agriculture for food would be behind a decade, automobile emissions would be behind worldwide by at least a decade. ... South Korea has offered so much in its short time of being developed that we have either contributed or revolutionised several major industries that affect the world every day."

God's dream for Korea is at stake

I began to get a picture right then that the divided people in the North, the other half of Korea, were stuck in an oppression, and it's not just that their lives are at stake. Their lives are very important! But God's dream for who Korea is supposed to be and what these people will bring to the worldwide scenario is at stake. When a country gets this oppressed, what is the enemy trying to hold back? What is the redemptive future of North Korea? I can see that it is huge, because it is one of the most resisted in the world. But I also started this journey from a vision I had over a decade ago.

An angel of Korea appeared to me and said, "Behold, I am strong, and I shall do a mighty work, even in preparing Israel for the return of Jesus."

Korea was never on the map of my heart or mind. Then one day, very randomly, an angel appeared in my room in a physical form. He said "Behold, I am from Korea."

I asked him "From North or South?" and he almost yelled at me "I am from Korea." And I realised there is no North or South Korea in God's heart. He never designed it to be separated. I didn't dare speak again.

Re-establish unity between North and South Korea

"I am strong, and God shall do a mighty work through the intercession nations of the world to re-establish unity between North and South Korea," the angels said. I knew he was saying he was strong because the purpose was ready to be fought for and won.

"God is sending you to Korea," the angel said to me. I had never considered it or had it on my radar. "You will help give the people faith to elect a president who will prepare the way for South Korea to be open to the Western world, even America again. There are communist sympathisers who have brought in an agenda to separate South Korea from relationship with Christian nations, but God is preparing a president who will keep the doors open to relationships with America and the world. There will be a day in your lifetime when our president will help open the North, and the North and South will have a unification.”

Now, I will say all of this is documented from 2004 and 2005, and then my trips to Korea began. I met with the soon-to-be president, President Lee, in 2007. No one I met thought he would win, but I knew he was going to be president, and I shared all of this and explained that God was raising him up to help all of Korea.

I prophesied all of this, and he believed me, and he was the first president in many years to visit America and re-establish relationship with the West even in trading, agriculture and some strategic relationship agreements. His office contacted me to help him visit America. He visited Bush in the White House, and it was a big deal and a prophetic act. No one believed this kind of relationship would rekindle then, but God prophesied it through me and through a prophet named Cindy Jacobs, who was giving almost the same words at the same time, although we weren't in communication. We were not coordinating, we were just hitting the same thing from different angles.

Uniting of hearts and purpose

The final thing that the angel said was “In the unification will come a uniting of hearts and purpose from the Korean people who have been given a boldness to stand with Israel, give their lives as missionaries and have been given the gift of technology, engineering and science. They are going to be used in great significance in the future before the return of Jesus. The children in North Korea are a seedbed of greatness, and they are filled with technologies that don't exist yet in the computer science world.”

Think about that: There are benefits that the whole world will experience through the development of His plan over this country. South Korea will benefit in a major way as well; there is a fear that if there is a unification, it will destroy the economy of South Korea. I prophesy now that the economy will become one of the largest in the world when the unification happens, because the technologies and resources that God wants to entrust to Koreans are some of the most valuable in the world markets because He knows what they will do with them.

I am sure that as we pray for what God is doing between Trump and Kim that it is the beginning of a great dismantling of warfare and that God is moving the nations toward unification. This unification will affect the entire world, just as South Korea's development has happened when the unification happened. This will not only add to South Korea's impact on the spiritual and natural side of our world, but it will multiply it.

Let's pray that this small step forward would itself be multiplied, because the angels over Korea are strong, and they are winning the battle. Let's also pray for those suffering right now until God's breakthrough happens are comforted and helped in this incredible time that could be just the start of their deliverance.

Join the conversation,
Christians! (Part 1) – Craig

Photography),

Craig Bailie questions whether the Church in South Africa is appropriately engaged in the necessary conversations surrounding issues of social justice. In the first of a 3-part series he calls on Christians to become 'sacred spaces' of conversation.

Three recent, provocative and reinforcing events helped motivate the writing of this article. In a sense, this article is a continuation of the same dialogue initiated at these three separate events. This is a dialogue, which, I believe Jesus calls all South African Christians to enter into, in this space and time, but which I believe many of us have and continue to deny the opportunity.

By “reinforcing”, I mean these events encouraged and reaffirmed in me, an already-existing and developing sense of the need for action, in and by the Christian Church in South Africa. This piece exists as a general call for action, but even before this, it serves as a plea for South Africa’s local church congregations to engage in a particular kind of action, to become increasingly sacred spaces of conversation.

Siyakhula: 'Embracing a New Normal'

In May, I attended a three-day workshop with the above title. The Siyakhula workshop was organised and hosted by Stellenbosch University's Transformation Office in partnership with the university's Equality Unit, the Disability Unit, and Human Resources. The workshop, still on offer, is aimed at university staff with the purpose of encouraging change in, and understanding of, aspects of the university's institutional culture.

Themes and concepts that were uncovered and discussed included "modern racism", "internalised oppression", "ableism", "rape culture", "decolonisation" and "gender identity", among others. These themes, chosen in and for the Stellenbosch University context, are reflective of realities elsewhere in the country and in the world.

For the Christian, this commonality between a South African university campus and spaces found elsewhere in the world has its origin in a common human nature. Beyond this faith-based explanation and from a socio-politico-economic perspective, globalisation also explains the common realities that have come to characterise different parts of the world.

I cannot claim to have been in support of all that was said or the tacit "agreements" that were, on occasion made between members of the audience and the facilitators at the Siyakhula workshop. I can say, however, that I was and remain thankful for the opportunity to have been involved in the discussion.

Refined thinking, strengthened faith

Ultimately, the workshop refined my thinking and strengthened my faith. Gaps in my own knowledge on social justice issues together with my inability to articulate some of my religious beliefs in relation to these issues were exposed. In short, the experience was one of growth and served as a catalyst for further reflective thought, study and conversation.

While the type of conversations held during the workshop will inevitably continue on the Stellenbosch University campus, in other spaces of South African higher education and beyond the academe, I am of the belief that these discussions have yet to commence in many parts of the Christian Church and certainly the Church in South Africa.

As Christians, we often fail to allow sacredness in the spaces that we occupy. This is because we ourselves are not living and behaving sacredly. We are not living according to the intended purpose for which God created us, and for which Christ died. We often fail, for a number of possible reasons, to allow the presence of the Holy Spirit to abide in us. We fail to allow the sanctification that comes with abiding in Christ.

On the other hand, sacredness also fails to manifest in spaces, precisely because Christians fail to occupy those spaces; choosing instead to keep a safe distance; choosing instead to maintain an inward as opposed to an outward focus.

Learning opportunities

I would argue therefore, that the entry of Christians into spaces like the Siyakhula workshop should be a biblical, and by implication, a standard practice for the Christian. These spaces provide an opportunity to learn from and share with those who, although perhaps holding a different worldview, also carry a desire to see justice done. Conversely and more importantly, Christians must create these same spaces within and across local congregations, inviting inside those who remain outside of the Church.

Two things inform my concern over what I perceive to be inaction, or more specifically, an absence of healthy conversation within the South African Church on issues of social justice.

The first of these is my personal and more recent experience of local church. This is not only the local church as it meets on Sundays, but also the local church that moves beyond the traditional Sunday service and into the broader public space. This broader public space includes social media. It is here that I see on display the denial, arrogance and ignorance of professing Christians in South Africa, in relation to issues of social justice, but particularly issues of race.

At the commencement of the Siyakhula workshop, the chief facilitator called upon participants to view the workshop as a sacred space. I interpreted this as a call for a space in which we share our experiences and views openly, honestly and respectfully; where we seek to understand before being understood; where we expect to be confronted with awkwardness, emotion and hurt; and above all, where we grow in concern for the well-being of the other. Based on my limited experience, and in the context of social justice issues, this sacred space is often absent within the Church.

God has a sweet tooth –
Hannah Viviers

I can see you cringe at my heading – or maybe you’re chuckling – either way it’s going to be a fun article ... I hope.

A while ago I asked our editor here at Gateway News, Andre Viljoen, if I could write articles around the nutrition/health connection.

So here goes...

Healthy eating ‘research’ confusing

Working in the health arena I come across tons of information regarding health. There’s a lot of contradiction from various sources which can make healthy eating confusing.

There are plenty ‘research papers’ and ‘studies’ on nutrition so it’s hard to know what to follow.

I put research in inverted commas because we now know that a lot of what is called ‘research’ is paid-for propaganda by various interests. Meaning, the ‘findings’ of many ‘research’ papers are not real results but rather what the funders of those ‘studies’ want us to believe.

I shared this with Andre who said: “Research keeps changing. But the Word of God never changes.”

This was liberating.

Since then whenever I had a question about information on nutrition I would refer to Scripture to find out what God has said.

Which brings me to my heading about God having a sweet tooth.

Is it in our DNA?

The primary way many folks satisfy their sweet tooth is with sugary foods and drinks.

We know sugar is one of the leading triggers for weight gain, disease, sleeping disorders and all sorts of other dysfunctions in our body.

Many of us have heard of the highly addictive nature of sugar. We're told sugar is even more addictive than cocaine.

Why is it that many people, (yes, even Christians), are addicted to sugar?

Why does this one taste have such a pull on us?

This question led me to wondering if perhaps our draw to sweet tastes was part of our design.

What the Bible says

I remembered Andre's advice and started combing my mind for what I could remember in the Bible about 'sweet' tastes.

I giggled as the many references to 'sweet' in the Bible came to me.

Tickled by the many references, I came to the conclusion that surely God must have a sweet tooth!

Being created in His image, was it possible that our seemingly irresistible connection with sweet tastes had been downloaded to us from our Dad in Heaven?

We know from Genesis 1:29 that fruit was one of the primary foods God gave Adam and Eve to eat in the garden.

Most fruit as we know it is incredibly sweet.

When God described the Promised Land He had purposed to give the Children of Israel, He spoke of a land flowing with milk and honey – honey, there's that sweet element again.

While they were in the wilderness, God fed His people manna from Heaven, which the Bible tells us: ...was like coriander seed, white; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey – Exodus 16:31.

Talk about sweet!

There are many other mentions of sweet in the Bible, but I'll leave it there.

We can all relate

I don't believe God would've given us so many naturally sweet foods if He Himself didn't have a sweet tooth.

I believe that the "sweet-tooth" most of us have is a direct gene from our Father.

When we look at the various diets, Ketogenic, Paleo, Vegan, GAPS, Raw etc what they all have in common is the obvious love for sweet tastes.

We may disagree on different tastes but when it comes to sweet many of us can absolutely correlate the taste of sweet with a sense of good and pleasure.

What better way for God to describe some wonderfully pleasurable concepts in His Word than tapping into a sense most of us can fully relate to?

So what's the problem?

The problem we have with having a sweet tooth comes when we consume unnatural or heavily processed sugars.

These are sugars that are either extracts from the real thing, (like sugar from sugar cane), or various other toxic sweeteners (like Aspartame) that are a far cry from what God intended for our bodies to consume.

It's no wonder our bodies react negatively to these sugars.

For some people the negative reactions become so severe all kinds of disease are triggered – because these are sugars our bodies were not designed to process.

Through my work as a Health and Body Detox Coach, I repeatedly see people's health significantly improve by cutting out nasty sugars, and replacing them with highly beneficial, naturally sweet foods such as raw organic honey, sweet potato (which is amazing for our good gut bacteria), apples which are a powerful detoxifier and so many other naturally sweet foods.

Sweet is good. But it has to be the right kind of sweet, in the right amounts.

Can South Africa really afford to meddle in the Israel – Palestine Conflict? – Tshego Motaung

The South African ambassador to Israel, Sisa Ngombane, with then-president Shimon Peres in Jerusalem, in February 2013. (PHOTO: Issac Harari/Flash90 via Times of Israel)

Last year the Mail & Guardian hosted a number of dialogues with the ANC presidential hopefuls before the Nasrec conference.

This to me was a rare opportunity to engage ANC leaders on policies that affect all of us as South Africans. I had observed, with concern (as we all have), how the line between party and state has been blurring over the years. Party factional problems have become national problems, and party positions are often confused as government positions.

One of the issues I asked Dr Zweli Mkhize, who was also campaigning for leadership of the party, was the ANC position on the Israel-Palestine conflict. I wanted to understand if the ANC believed that South Africa, with all its problems, could afford to take sides in the matter. The ANC policy conference had recommended to downgrade diplomatic relations with Israel, however this still needed to be adopted by the ANC conference in Nasrec. Once adopted by the conference, the diplomatic downgrading could easily become government policy.

Dr Mkhize left my question till the end, and when he answered he just stated the party position, without engaging on the reasons behind that posture.

Why so personal?

From the time the ANC policy conference made this recommendation I couldn't help but wonder why the Palestine conflict was so much more important to the ANC than all the other conflicts in the world. Why was it so personal to the ANC?

This is the same ANC that ignored the crisis just next door in Zimbabwe. Since ZANU-PF rigged elections in 2008 we have all witnessed the suffering of the people of Zimbabwe, and South Africa bore the brunt of the problems in Zimbabwe. Yet the ANC maintained that Zimbabweans needed to find solutions internally and one would remember how ANC leaders insisted that there was no crisis in Zimbabwe. My heart broke when Morgan Tsvangirai passed away in February this year before he could enjoy the freedom he had paid dearly for.

On a recent trip back from Ethiopia I sat next to a young woman from Cameroon who said she was coming to explore study opportunities because “the situation at home was no longer bearable”. There’s been a silent conflict in Cameroon for years now, a legacy of colonialism – where English-speaking citizens have been crying for independence.

The deteriorating situation in Cameroon, she explained, had reached levels they had never seen before, leading to a decision by her family to send her away to study – a first in her family. This was shortly after the AU Summit – and I don’t remember the ANC making a big issue about this compared with the level that I have heard them on Palestine.

One cannot help but ask: why is Palestine so much closer to the ANC than what Zimbabweans went through over the past 10 years, and to what is currently happening in Cameroon? In both these nations there were major human rights violations and atrocities that devastated many families.

I will not even go into conflicts in other African countries like Democratic Republic of Congo, South Sudan, Central African Republic and Somalia, where many people continue to lose their lives, and South Africa’s position has mostly been that of a mediator that allows internal peace processes to resolve these conflicts, instead of taking sides with a faction.

Shared struggle history

Some ANC members cite having been in the trenches with the Palestinians during the struggle days as a reason for taking sides today. I suppose this explains their support for Mugabe – their shared struggle history.

We now have the benefit of hindsight and we know that our freedom as South Africans was delayed because we got caught up in the Cold War. The decision by the ANC to align with the Soviet Union caused our genuine and desperate need for liberation to be mixed up with global politics. While everyone sympathised with the suffering of the South African people, fears of handing over a country with such a developed economy and military prowess to leaders aligned to the Soviet Union was a concern to global powers and sadly we became pawns in the global chess game.

Our country has gone through a painful period caused by oppression but somehow the formerly oppressed and former oppressors are able to coexist within the same borders. There is a lot of work to be done to heal the divisions of the past, but we have demonstrated that reconciliation is possible. I believe that that's what we need to be championing in the world – peace and reconciliation, and not to be taking sides in conflicts.

The ANC cannot afford to have eternal allies and perpetual enemies; but must rather be guided by the interests of our new democratic society. They have been given a mandate of leadership not only by ANC members but by many other South Africans who are ANC members but voted for them. Therefore, the interests of South Africa must be above those of the party.

Not anybody's private property

South Africa is not the private property of the ANC, or any political party for that matter. By winning elections, the ANC was just given a mandate by the people of South Africa to steward the affairs of the nation for the benefit of all its citizens for five years. They must therefore not use the resources of the nation to repay political favours to their struggle allies.

I don't believe it is in South Africa's interest to take sides in this conflict. Israel has America as its ally, and the economies of these two countries are too advanced; their youth are educated, employed and pioneering major developments in the world; and their combined military might is too strong for us to want to challenge. What is worse for us is that many other African countries are currently strengthening relations with Israel – including Zambia, the former exile headquarters of the ANC.

I do believe the situation of Palestine and Israel must be resolved – but I don't believe we want to bring yet another global conflict to our doorstep; and use our country, its resources and people as pawns in another global chess game.

Important message to South Africa – Dr Arno van Niekerk

Friends, Tuesday (26 May 2018) marked the end of 70 years since apartheid was instituted in South Africa on May 26 1948. It is the end of a generation and an era.

Yet our country is grappling with renewed racial tensions and feelings of injustice (on all sides). This has the potential to destroy us if we allow the past to rule our future. Today we have entered into a new dispensation in our history if we apply Biblical insight.

We have a choice before us: life or death. The more we get divided and polarised over issues, the closer we move to death. The enemy's age-old tactic is 'divide and rule' to kill, steal and destroy. If we don't see through what's going on we will gradually succumb to hatred.

The time for all of us to stand together and love each other has never been greater. Choose today to become an instrument of mass restoration.

On this day, 27 May 2018, step into a NEW DAY and a new future for South Africa. The Lord says, "See I am doing a new thing! Now it springs up; do you not perceive it? I am making a new way in the wilderness and streams in the wasteland" – Isaiah 43:19.

Rise above the noise and BE Good News to our beloved country ! More than ever our nation needs healing. BE that balm of healing in the Lord's hands. This is step one, don't skip it. Then what we grapple with will be naturally solved.

South Africa: "Unless the Lord builds the house, the builders labour in vain" – Psalm 127:1 . Start with the Cornerstone. BE the hands and feet of Jesus Christ. Deep inside, this is what our nation is crying out for. Let us answer this cry with Good News.

The history of our country is a complex one – and whenever we tell the story of South Africa, we often take out parts we don't like.

This makes us an interesting country where history lessons often depend on who is telling the story.

I was confronted by this reality once, while visiting Namibia, when I was accused as a South African of colonising Namibia.

I felt I could not be held responsible for that because it was the fault of the former apartheid government and not the new South African government.

After much argument and my attempts to explain that it was unfair to hold me and our current government responsible, it was the closing statement made that hit home.

My accuser said as long as the new South Africa benefited from the "spoils" of apartheid, we too were responsible.

I had never thought of myself or our government as colonisers.

But as I got to understand the economic manipulations that continued in Namibia even after independence to the benefit of South African companies and our GDP, I understood the point and realised our hands are not entirely clean.

Today the issues of white privilege, racism and inequality are still major challenges to the progress of Namibia – all these are legacies of the past that continue to benefit South African businesses.

I later understood that perhaps the reason I couldn't comprehend the idea of our government being referred to as a coloniser is because we are in the same boat in our own country.

We managed to gain political freedom, but we are still not entirely free. We are still grappling with racism, white privilege and issues of economic freedom that have somehow eluded us since 1994.

And until the majority of South Africans have gained this liberty, it will be difficult to address the neocolonial tendencies of South African companies in the continent.

Reviewing my version of SA's history

This conversation helped me review what I believed to be South Africa's history. I realised that my version of South Africa's history was mostly through the eyes of my people group – the Black people of South Africa opposed to White rule and at times even not acknowledging the pain, struggles and contribution of the Coloured and Indian communities.

Our inability to acknowledge everything that has happened in this country as part of our shared history limits our ability to resolve the issues that confront us today.

One of the dates that caught my attention in the life of our nation was May 26 – last Saturday. This date marks exactly 70 years since apartheid was institutionalised in 1948.

Seventy years is an important milestone in the life of a person. Human development is often explained in seven-year cycles, with each stage flagging an important transition to the next level of maturity.

While many, like me, would want to think of South Africa as a 24-years old nation today – we cannot ignore the fact that this new government inherited a government with a history that predates 1994, and if we fail to acknowledge this we will miss valuable lessons.

The 70 years also caught my attention because it reminded of the story in the Bible when Israel was being taken captive to Babylon. Their leaders tried to resist in the beginning but were warned by the prophet Jeremiah that any effort to resist captivity or attempt to escape was doomed to fail until 70 years were completed.

It was at that time, as they were being dragged to captivity. that this great promise was made:

“When seventy years are completed for Babylon, I will come to you and fulfill my good promise to bring you back to this place. For I know the plans I have for you,” declares the Lord, “plans to prosper you and not to harm you, plans to give you hope and a future.” – Jeremiah 29:11.

While today we love quoting this Scripture, those who heard it couldn't believe it. It was unimaginable to reconcile this promise with the pain and destruction they were going through.

For most South Africans, the past 70 years can be likened to a period of captivity, like this story in the Bible. Many people hoped that 1994 would be their time of liberty, but today we know that the we have not been able to fully dismantle the power of the laws enacted in 1948.

What happened, unfortunately, in 1994 is that we began a nation-building project based on a framework designed by apartheid architects. As a result we have seen economic growth and high inequalities. It is also no surprise that the Afrikaner dream of creating wealth equivalent to that of English-speaking whites in 1948, has been realised, if not surpassed, in the new South Africa – this was the design of the economy.

This past May 26 went past like any other day – with nothing done to remind us of the beginning of what became a powerful oppressive regime because it brings up deep-seated pain to some and shame to others. Yes, I don't expect parties and celebration but rather that we use this 70th anniversary as an opportunity to reflect on – to understand – what made the apartheid idea more attractive to those in power than other ideas that were proposed at the time.

Time to learn lessons from past

This, I believe, will help us learn some lessons, especially as we are facing a process of reviewing the Constitution of South Africa to address the subject of land redistribution.

One of the reasons the National Party won elections in that era is because it capitalised on the fears and insecurities of White Afrikaners who were still suffering trauma as a result of the Anglo-Boer war. The fear of others ruling them again created an atmosphere in which the ruling elite was given power to use all forms of evil to fight this perceived threat.

In a position of brokenness, the Afrikaner people couldn't imagine a possibility of a good future shared with all others in the country.

Today it is no longer debatable whether South Africa is a society of broken and hurting people. President Cyril Ramaphosa acknowledged this at the funeral of Mama Winnie Mandela when he said: "We must also recognise our own wounds as a nation. We must acknowledge that we are a society that is hurting, damaged by our past, numbed by our present and hesitant about our future. This may explain why we are easily prone to anger and violence.”

The brokenness of our society doesn't only affect the poor and marginalised, but also impacts those in positions of economic power. Most of them are driven by fear and anxiety about losing power that renders them incapable of imagining a possible good future if they shared their wealth.

We must therefore be careful of how the state of our brokenness could be manipulated at this time when we deal with the land issue.

As we marked the end of 70 years of apartheid, we find ourselves yet again at another defining moment in the history of country, where the choices we make today will affect generations to come. We need to rise above our past and lay a new foundation for our future that will give hope to everyone, one that all our children will be proud of 70 years from today.

Visiting evangelist equipping believers to heal sick, make disciples – Kate Fitz-Gibbon

A call for you to rise up into a new way of being and living with God.

Hey Folks,

It's that time of year where my friend Brian Blount from Oklahoma, USA is coming to South Africa. Brian operates in miracles, healing and power evangelism but more than that, he equips the church to do the same. He believes in activating people into the great commission, to go out and heal the sick and make disciples of all nations.

Brian flows strongly in the prophetic and in word of knowledge, but most of all he has such a passion and love for people!

There are countless testimonies of healing and salvation from the tour Brian did of South Africa last year, and many South Africans were trained to go out and 'do the stuff' as Brian says.

This year he is bringing a big team from the states and Germany who are hungry to come pour out on the people of SA, as well as SA team members joining too.

Brian kicks off crusades and training in Johannesburg, then Newcastle, Durban, PE and Cape Town. Brian is with the Vineyard network and runs a Vineyard church in Oklahoma while travelling globally training and ministering. There are times when you just know that a move of God is happening and Brian is a move of God. The time he is spending here in SA has been set into motion by God to help raise the standard here and bring about breakthrough.

Below are two healing services you can join next week, one in Johannesburg and the other in Pretoria

HEALING & MIRACLE CRUSADE

BRING THE LOST, SICK, LAME, DEAF, OPPRESSED

Pastor and Evangelist Brian Blount from the USA has been ministering, teaching, and training individuals and churches in USA, Europe, South America, and South Africa on power evangelism and healing for the last 20 years. Pastor Blount's heart is to train God's people on how they can proclaim the gospel in love and power and put Jesus on display as a lifestyle, through signs and wonders. Pastor Blount with a team from USA and Germany will be ministering and training in South Africa nationwide in May & June 2018.

Healing Crusade Wednesday 30th June

2018 – Everyone is Welcome

In the meantime I want to encourage you to take one step of faith and decide to do something to demonstrate God's love to a stranger. Offer to pray for someone's headache. Minister to the waitress when grabbing a cup of coffee. Ask God for a word for your petrol attendant. If you are the waitress or petrol attendant, ask God for a word for your customers. You may say, 'what difference does my prayer make?' But I want to tell you, many times I've prayed for someone and thought, 'I wonder if that even made a difference', only to see them again at the same restaurant and hear how God came through for them. Sometimes it seems unreal how one prayer can change somebody's life, but it really does.

Imagine a country where everyday people are spoken to with the love of Jesus, and as a country we are known for the ministry that takes place on street, in offices, at restaurants, in petrol stations. Imagine you could walk into any shopping centre and know there were staff in the stores who would pray for you.

Right now in SA we are at a tipping point, where we need as many people who as possible to act in love and hope. You don't have to hold a massive crusade, just look someone in the eyes and tell them they are loved by God. That does and it will make a huge difference! It starts with you.

As Brian would teach, if you don't know what to pray for, just ask the person if there is something you can pray for. If you're worried about them saying no or thinking you're weird, you'll find 9 times out of 10 people want to be prayed for. They are so grateful someone noticed them, that they matter. If you don't feel like praying, give someone a hug.

I feel something rising, like it's going to be easy to love people in South Africa, like we could be known for our love.

Let's do this thing!
